

Tools and Planners

Best planner for ADHD: 5 steps

Five steps to pick a planner you will still use past February.

1

Step 1

Count where your tasks live

Sticky notes, three apps, the back of an envelope. List them all. Your goal is one place with room for everything.

★ One home beats five half homes.

2

Step 2

Match the view to your week

Days look alike? A daily page can work. Schedule shifts a lot? A week at a glance shows what is coming without flipping.

★ Pick for your real week.

3

Step 3

Go undated if you drop off

Blank dated weeks can feel like a scorecard. Undated planners let you skip a week and pick up again with no guilt.

★ Forgiving pages win.

4

Step 4

Choose function over looks

Pretty is fun for a week. A short daily priority list and a layout you get at a glance keep you coming back.

★ No tutorial needed.

5

Step 5

Give it a home and a cue

Keep it open in one spot and tie a quick look to something you already do, like coffee. Try it for two weeks.

★ Not working? That is data.

Find the one you will keep

Seven picks, paper and digital, are in the full guide on How to Complete a Project.

Save this for later

Full guide: link in bio