

Staying On Track

How to use an accountability partner

Support and structure, not scolding. Six small steps to set it up.

1

Step 1

Decide what support you want

Stuck at the start, the middle or the end? A morning text helps you start. A video call helps you stay put.

★ Name where you usually stall.

2

Step 2

Choose someone kind and reliable

Not the strictest person you know. Pick someone who cheers small wins and stays calm when you miss a day.

★ Someone with their own goal is great.

3

Step 3

Agree on a simple setup

Decide how often, where (text, voice note, call), what you share, and what happens if one of you goes quiet.

★ Write the plan in one message.

4

Step 4

Keep each check in tiny

Not "work on the project." Try "20 minutes on the budget sheet today." Then report back, even if it was five.

★ Specific is easier to report on.

5

Step 5

Plan for missed days

You will miss one. Decide now what that looks like, like a quick "back tomorrow." Your partner helps you restart.

★ Shrink the next goal if you want to hide.

6

Step 6

Review after a month

Ask each other what helped and what felt like pressure. Change the rhythm, or try a group or a coach instead.

★ Not working is information, not failure.

You do not have to do it alone

One kind person and one tiny check in can get a stalled project moving again.

Save this for later

Full guide: link in bio