

Staying On Track

ADHD productivity for bad brain days

A gentle system with a bad day setting built in, so you keep moving when focus drops.

1

Step 1

Give every task one place

Sticky notes, texts and memory are hard to trust. Pick one home: a notebook, a notes app or a simple task app.

★ Same spot, every time.

2

Step 2

Write three sizes of plan

A full version, an okay version (your top two or three) and a minimum version: one tiny thing that keeps it alive.

★ Choosing the minimum still counts.

3

Step 3

Plan tomorrow tonight

Five minutes: glance at your list, pick tomorrow's top one to three tasks, and set out what you need.

★ Bad mornings just follow the note.

4

Step 4

Turn repeat tasks into routines

Bills, a weekly report, a kitchen reset. Write the steps once, in order, and keep the list where you do the task.

★ Follow it, do not rebuild it.

5

Step 5

Build in buffers and breaks

Allow more time than you think a task needs, take short timed breaks, and leave empty space in your day on purpose.

★ Space absorbs a slow start.

6

Step 6

Make restarting easy

Missed a day? Skip the catch up marathon and the guilt. Open your list, pick today's minimum and do just that.

★ Coming back is the skill.

Plans that fit real days

The full guide, with a good, okay and bad day table, is on How to Complete a Project.

Save this for later

Full guide: link in bio