

Getting Started

Executive dysfunction tips

When you know what to do and still cannot start. Six gentle ways to move anyway.

1

Step 1

Notice which skill is stuck

Do you forget the task, freeze at the start, or get knocked off by a change of plan? Name where it breaks down.

★ Different stuck spots, different fixes.

2

Step 2

Get the task out of your head

Stop using your brain as storage. Write the task and its steps on paper, somewhere you will see them.

★ A sticky note counts.

3

Step 3

Make the first step tiny

Two minutes, no decisions. Open the document, put the shoes by the door, fill the water glass.

★ Moving makes the next step easier.

4

Step 4

Give it a time and a place

A list without times grows forever. Put the task in a calendar slot you actually look at, then set a timer.

★ Start with 15 minute blocks.

5

Step 5

Borrow structure from others

Body doubling, a check in text, or a quick chat about what done looks like. Outside support is not cheating.

★ Company makes starting easier.

6

Step 6

Plan for low energy days

Keep a short list of easy wins, and write down routines you repeat so you do not rebuild them from memory.

★ Be as kind to you as to a friend.

It is not a willpower problem

Build support around your brain instead of fighting it. Pick one tip and try it for a week.
